Battered and Brain Injured
Identifying and Supporting Brain Injured
Women Survivors of Intimate Partner Violence

Every year thousands of Canadian women are beaten by their intimate partners. Most of the physical injuries are a result of battery to the face, head, neck, and/or strangulation, a pattern of violence leaving women survivors vulnerable to traumatic brain injury (TBI).

Many service providers and front line workers who support women in abusive relationships have little knowledge of TBI, and this lack of knowledge can affect their ability to provide adequate support.

You are invited to a panel discussion to learn about:

- knowledge and service gaps identified by key stakeholders, including front line and tertiary service providers, advocates, women with lived experience of TBI and intimate partner violence, and researchers
- strategies for providing and implementing appropriate and timely services
- strategies for sharing knowledge across stakeholder communities
- research priorities to inform and facilitate a national strategy

The session will be held on September 26, 2016 from 4:30-6:00pm at the Chestnut Conference Centre in Toronto. An opportunity to network and converse with panel members and stakeholders will follow.

Light snacks and beverages will be served.
